JOHNSON'S RHEUMATIC

No Medicine for the cure of Rheumatism has ever attained to such a high degree of favor and universality as Johnson's Rheumatic Compound. Although but one year before the public, this medicine has justly gained an authounded poor brity. When the originator first introduced it he was convinced of its efficacy, but he little thought it was destined to rove such an inestinate blessing to the afflicted; but true merit can not be suppressed. The attestation of hundreds who have been cured by it must prove the truth of the assertion that it is FORTRESS MONROE, June 12.—Mr. and Mrs. Jeff. Davis appear to have no lack of visitors, whom they receive in the newly fitted up quarters in one of the casemates insuice the fortress, which were assigned to Mrs. Davis shortly after her arrival here, but which, until now, she has steadfastly refused to occupy, making renewed demands daily upon the patience of the Commanding General for rooms in Carroll Hall, where her husband is imprisoned, which demands have been as persistently refused. On yesterday, J. L. Crenshaw, of the well known firm of blockade runners during the war, was closeted with both Mr. and Mrs. Davis, remaining in the fort till this morning, when he left for Richmond. The object of his visit, rumor says, was in reterpathizers now often call and have in esteem, and offers of assistance as far as it may be in their power.

was emeny devoted to an argument in favor of Davis' parole or release.

Early yesterday morning it was noised about that Mr. Greely was in the city, and was stopping with our distinguished fellow-eitzen, Judge Underwood. The consequence was that many of our loyal citizens during the morning repaired to the Judge's residence, where they were met by the host of the distinguished visitors; to whom they were at once introduced. Several hours were pleasantly spent here with Messrs. Greeley and Shea, and at the hoar of their departure they were accompanied to the ten o'clock boat by a number of our citizens.

The Alexandria Journal of Monday afternoon says:

Without being conversant with the inside workings of the manœuyres of the counsel and others for the release of Jeff. Davis on bail or parole, we have to state the following rumors, some of which, we have good reason to believe, are founded on fact. It is well known that immediately upon the adjournment of the United States Circuit Court at Richmond, on Thursday last, the counsel of Mr. Davis at once repaired to Washington to consult with Mr. Johnson in regard to the release of Jeff. Davis on parole. Judge Underwood did not arrive here until Saturday afternoon, but it appears, from repeated telegrams of inquiry, that his counsel arrived in Washington many hours previous. At a late hour on Saturday evening, Mr. Shea, one of Davis' counsel, was informed by some one here that Judge Underwood was at home, and he immediately started, on the reception of this news, in company with Hon. Horace Greeley, for this city. The connsel and his distinguished friend arrived here by private convey ance about ten o'clock on Saturday inght. What transpired between them and Judge Underwood, after their arrival here, is more than we can tell. Sufficie it to say that they had a lengthy interview with him, which rumor says was chiefy devoted to an argument in favor of Davis' parole or release.

He has been held ever since, and is now held, as a military prisoner. He is not and has never been in the custody of the Marshal for the District of Virginia, and he is not, therefore, within the power of the Court.

While this condition remains, no proposition for bail can be properly entertained, and I do not wish to indicate any probable action under the circumstances.

CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE'S VIEWS.

Alexandria, June 11, 1806.

CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE'S VIEWS.

A Washington correspondent telegraphs, under date of Monday evening:
It is true that on Saturday last Attorney-General Speed and Mr. O'Connor and others of counsel for Davis called on Judge Chase and talked the matter over, with a view of learning whether the Judge would issue the writ and determine the question of ball under the indictment. No formal or technical application for the writ of habeas corpus and for bail was made. Judge Chase freely gave these gentlemen his opinions on the subjects discussed. He intimated that he did not regard the offense a bailable one, and he says that he stands now as he did some weeks ago, when, after the promulgation of the Peace Proclamation, he stated that he would not preside in a court in Virginia until he could have assurance beyond a peradventure that martial law is abrogated in that State. Believing that there is yet a doubt upon that point, notwithstanding he is inclined to interpret the Peace. Proclamation as Mr. Johnson does, Judge Chase will not entertain any motion or proposition relative to the case of Mr. Davis, and so he expressed himself to the gentlemen above mentioned, but he suggested that Judge Underwood might possibly entertain the motion.

JEFF, DAVIS AND HORACE GREELEY. The New York Times—which cannot e accused of being "radical" in its iews—in its issue yesterday has the ollowing editorial on the case of Jeff. Dayis and the exertion of Mr. Greeley in his behalf:

Dayis and the exertion of Mr. Greeley in his behalf:

Jefferson Davis was the head and front of a rebellion, in the progress of which a quarter of a million of our sons fell, and for which the nation is carrying a debt of over three thousand millions of dollars. While Jefferson Davis was in his glory at Richmond, Union prisoners—soldiers—were dying in Rebel prisons of "pestilenee and famine," by thousands. Under the suspices of Jefferson Davis, and with the money of the Confederate Government, agents were employed to introduce contaglous diseases into our cities. Under the same auspices, and with the same money, Confederate agents in Canada hatched conspiractes and raids to robour banks, murder our citizens, burnour cities and assassinate our President. our cities and assassinate our resident.
These multiform and atrocious crimes were approved by Jefferson Davis. He has never even denied his responsibility or complicity in them. When any of the guilty agents were arrested they objected! Mr. Greeley was opposed the "death penalty." Mr. Greeley is a philanthropist! Mr. Greeley's sympathies warm to the man who struck a blow at the life of the Republic; who blow at the life of the Republic; who deliged our country in blood; who sanctioned piracy, arson and assagsination! This craven, white feathered spirit, from influential sources, occasioned delay, and delays end in a denial of justice. Jefferson Davis should have been promptly tried, convicted and sentenced, after which, if the President had commuted the sentence on condition of his leaving the country forever, we should have been rid of a bad subject. And now, while Davis is living upon the fat of the land in Fortress Munroe, Mr. Greeley rushes to Washington to offer buil, so that not even

A Political Panie.

Mr. Ancona, of Pennsylvania, a copperhead, yesterday caused what travellers on the western plains call a "stampede" amongst the politicians of the House of Representatives. He offered a resolution repealing the Neutrality laws, in order to let the Fenians freely into Canada.

tion.

In holding the District Courts of Virginia, I have uniformly recognized this condition,

Jefferson Davis was arrested under a proclamation of the President, charge-

blamed the President for taking measures to guard our neighbors, with whom we are at peace, from being attacked by men armed and organized within our border, and setting out from here, we did not think that one hundred and thirteen members of Congress could be induced to give their votes for a resolution to the same general surpose.

One hundred and thirteen members of Congress voted against the motion to dismiss Mr. Ancona's resolution. Does it then follow that Congress—or this part of it—would have Canada invaded from Buffalo and Cleveland? Is it to be supposed that these one hundred and thirteen would, as the Tribune the otherday suggested, treat England with the same evasion with which she treated us, and thus themselves commit the flagrant wrong of which we all for four years so bitterly complained? We do not suppose anything of the kind. We suppose only that of the kind. We suppose only that members were thinking of "the Irish vote," and they voted, as some of them speak, for Buncombe.

Politicians fear that the Fenians will revenge their defeat in the next election; and so they act a part which is prudent, even if it is despicable. But we advise Republicans and Union men not to be led sway by their fears. We do not know what dreadful thing the Fenian monster may do to those who do not timely proptifate it, or what important favors it may grant its friends or adulators. But, one thing is certain—the copperheads can afford to bid higher for its favor than any respectable Union men; they have more to gain and less to lose: their antecedents, as the supporters of fillbustering against Cuba and Central America, as the palliators of New York riots, the defenders of the rebel leaders, and the would-be derebel leaders, and the would-be de-stropers of the very principle of law and order on this continent—these an-tecedents will of themselves recommend them to the more lawless and desperate of the Feniau leaders. Mr. desperate of the Fenian leaders. Mr. Ancona had a better chance of securing the Fenian vote, in his district, than his Republican opponent; for the simple reason that they know Mr. Ancona to have but little respect or regard for law and order, and they presume the opposite of any member of the other party.

Currespondence of the New York Herald.

Santiago DE Cuba, May 19.

In a Spanish theatrical company, lately here, was a lady, young, handsome, and talented. She has smitten many they say, and in return accepted proffered hearts innumerable. This kind of thing is called love, by courtesy only; but the course of such runs oftentimes with as little smoothness as that of true love. A gentleman, who shall be nameless, was smitten by this lady, and paid her unremitting attention, so much so, that there were, strangely enough, rumors of marriage—for the lady, though very fair, is very frail. Be that as it may, the gentleman if not matrimonially inclined, was an accepted lover of the strongest type. In course of time a rival appeared. One day the rivals met; the one glorying in his triumph, the other envious and devoured by chagrin; by no means in a temper to endure each other. They met at dinner; but no wine was needed to excite men already excited by each other's presence. The scene, though festive, was not gay; nor did the presence of the lady tend to make matters more agreeable. When she rose, the fortunate lover escorted her to the door, and returned to the table in time to hear a bitter rose, the fortunate lover escorted her to the door, and returned to the table in time to hear a bitter remark from his discomfited rival. To make a long story short, a challenge was sent and accepted that very night. A duel to the death was agreed on—just think of two men, one a Colonel in the army, the other a young lawyer in good practice, one with a family to take care of, both in good positions in society, agreeing that one or the other, or both, should die for a woman who cared for neither. I think that the old Creole hatred of the Spaniards had something to do with the immovable determination of the young lawyer to accept no apology from the Colonel, who did all in his power to avoid the frightful alternatives of murder, suitable of the contract was who did all in his power to avoid the frightful alternatives of murder, suicide, or disgrace. His adversary was inexorable and they fought. At the second fire the successful lover fell, mortally wounded, and in three days more was buried. The Colonel, of course, has left the island. The lady dines tranquilly every day at the table where the dispute occurred, not yet a month ago. She sits opposite me, and we talk about it as we do of theatres or any other commonplace way. "It is such a pity he was killed; he was such a fine-looking young fellow. Would I be kind enough to give her a wing of that chicken, with a little of the breast? Poor fellow, he lived not quite two days. Is that porksteak? Thank you; don't like pork. The ball passed clean through his stomach." And so we gossiped till dinner is over.

siped till dinner is over. THE EUROPEAN CRISIS CULMINATING.

The steamship Hibernian, with European dates to the 1st inst., brought news most important and interesting in regard to the European complica-tions. A congress of powers had been agreed upon and would shortly meet, probably at Paris, with Louis Napo-leon as presiding officer. The object of the conference, according to the note of invitation sent to the federal diet by the French government, is to secure a diplomatic settlement of the questions of Schleswig-Holstein, Venetia and federal reform, so far as they each and all affect the European equilibrium. The several powers will be represented by the ministers of foreign affairs, with the exception of Austria, who will in regard to the European compl the exception of Austria, who probably send Prince Metternich.

io avert a war. Austria will not listen to the giving up of Venetla. She had already 600,000 men raised; she had thousands of men engaged in building fortifications; the headquarters of her army were about being moved to Prague, and the commander of the forces had issued orders to his troops relative to their conduct in a hostile country. And besides, she had levied a forced loan of twelve millions florins, in Lombardo, Venitia, and was reported to be trying to get a distinguished Polish chieftain to head a revolution in Prussian Poland. Of course, while the Prussian Poland. Of course, while the Congress is pending she drops active preparations for war, as do Prussia and preparations for war, as do Prussia and Italy, where there has been hardly less warlike activity than in Austria; but it is easily to be seen that they all alike regard the proposed Congress as a mere form, and mean to be ready for vigorous fighting as so in as it is declared a failure. Napoleon will call into play all his resources of diplomacy, but it looks now as though there would be war in spite of him—if indeed he really wishes to avoid war, which is not certain, though his words and actions just now are peaceful.
